MAKE WATER BEND!

Agent G shows you how to use the power of static electricity to control water itself!

YOU WILL NEED:

1. Plastic comb
2. Water from a tap

ASK AN ADULT TO HELP!

Turn on the tap partway so the water falls in a very narrow but constant stream (not drops!)

Step 2

Run the comb through your hair (it to side. What happens?

GARY'S SCIENCE BIT:

You built up static electricity in the comb by combing your hair, and it bends the water towards it like magic!

Tiny particles called electrons jump from your hair to the comb as they rub together. The comb now has extra electrons and is negatively charged. The water has both positive and negative charged particles which are attracted to each other so when you move the negatively charged comb towards the water, it attracts the water's positively charged particles and the stream bends!
